1. The Chinese Communists have established main stockpiles of military supplies in warehouses at Talung'ian (大龍潭), one mile east of Chinghsi (106-25, 23-09). Over 150 tons of equipment, mostly arms and ammunition, are now stored there. The area is heavily guarded, and air protection is provided by 5 Soviet-made radar-controlled anti-aircraft batteries at the top of some mountains behind the city.
2. The site of another supply station is at Fangshan (方山), about one-third of a mile east of T'ienpao (106-43, 23-23). In early December 1950 one company of army engineers began the construction of warehouses there, and by 1 January 1951 supplies were arriving. There are four anti-aircraft batteries on high points of terrain around Fangshan, and these emplacements are guarded by two platoons of infantry.
